Lantern for the Garden Party

A SharkBoat AI Storybook

A tiny raccoon and a hummingbird bright,
Found a glowing lantern frame one night.
They smiled and hummed with merry delight,
To make the garden party shine so bright.

The raccoon held tape with careful hands,
While the bird brought sparkly strings in bands.
Together they worked on their clever plans,
And folded each corner as gently as fans.

They added stars in a row so neat,
And tiny moons that looked so sweet.
Each shining shape was a happy treat,
A little moonlight for guests to meet.

A glassy jar gave a warm soft glow,
Like a firefly dreaming low.
They tested the light to make it show,
Then clapped and chirped in a joyful flow.

They carried it past the blooming bed,
Where sleepy petals nodded their head.
The lantern lit a golden thread,
Along the path where party guests would tread.

The garden party bells rang clear,
With twinkling laughter spreading near.
Friends gathered close to see it here,
And smiled as the lantern chased away fear.

The raccoon gave a proud little bow,
The hummingbird twirled a happy vow.
'We made a light for the night somehow,
To keep the whole garden shining now.'

When bedtime breezes whispered low,
The lantern glimmered soft and slow.
The tiny friends waved, then homeward they'd go,
Dreaming of light in a sleepy glow.
