The Kitten and the Cozy Scarf

A SharkBoat AI Storybook

On a rainy sill, the kitten sat near,
While soft drops of water made puddles appear.
The cozy scarf warmed it with gentle delight,
As gray little raindrops tapped morning to night.

The kitten looked out at the shimmery pane,
And watched silver raindrops make music again.
It tucked in its paws and stayed warm and still,
With the cozy scarf draped soft on the sill.

A breeze gave the window a whispery sigh,
The scarf gave a flutter, then waved goodbye.
The kitten held tight as it gave a small spin,
Then snuggled more close with a bright little grin.

It twirled in a circle, so tiny, so neat,
Then landed like sunshine right under its feet.
The kitten purred softly, so cozy and sweet,
And tapped with its tail to a raindrop beat.

The clouds rolled by, but the room stayed warm,
A snug little nest in the hush of the storm.
The scarf made a blanket of color and glow,
While sleepier eyelids began to go slow.

One raindrop shone like a pearl in the light,
Then blinked on the glass with a soft little sight.
The kitten said, "Mmm," and yawned with a sigh,
While the cozy scarf whispered, "Time to close your eye."

The kitten dreamed of a sunny blue day,
Yet kept its warm scarf wrapped snug all the way.
It slept by the window so peaceful and neat,
While rain sang a lullaby, gentle and sweet.

When morning arrived with a bright golden hue,
The kitten woke up and stretched out anew.
It purred at the rain and the soft shining sill,
Then smiled in its scarf, all cozy and still.
